In her speech she expressed that English students have a lot to offer prospective employers, including well-developed communication skills, the ability to work independently flexibility and adaptability.

She enlightened the students that the English graduates enter a broad range of professions, including education, marketing, journalism and public relations. Their analytical and communication skills are potentially in demand in management roles both in business & the public sector.

She convinced that the English graduates gained specific skills include :

- Critical & evaluating thinking, self-management, excellent written communication, oral communication and interpersonal skills, research and analysis skills & so on.
